Jeanette --

I'm afraid my James line is quite different from yours. My great-grandfather invented the surname James out of whole cloth early in this century, to Americanize his sons who were about to emigrate from Macedonia to the U.S. The name was Dimitrov before that.

Nancy Elizabeth JAMES (b. abt 1784 GA) m. William RADFORD (b. abt 1782 VA) in 1804 in Oglethorpe Co., GA. They named their first son, Elisha. I am looking for ancestry of Nancy Elizabeth JAMES. Welch Neck area of SC has a lot of JAMES families and I am looking at that area as I have other lines from there like HODGES and KING.

I read in Gregg's History of the Old Cheraws that a Rev. *Elisha* THOMAS' daughter, Sarah married Daniel JAMES and moved from PA-DE to the Welch Neck in SC with the Baptist congregation about 1746. You see where I'm trying to go! I wish I could find the names of their children. If anyone has suggestions, I'd be grateful.

I would especially like to hear from someone who is knowledgeable about the Welch Neck. I will be glad to share!

Family History

The descendants of Chess and Lula James have met together on the fourth Sunday of June since 1970. Our meeting place has always been the old farm of Leroy's maternal grandfather which we christened "What's Left". (Hence — the name of the cookbook.) As we have gathered to visit and spread our food on a long table under the pecan trees, we have put together some information on our roots which we would like to share and hope you find interesting.

Chess is the son of Andrew Jackson James (b. 11/May/1832—d. 12/July/1870) and Rebecca Glaze Fussell (b. 18/Sept./1835—d. 26 Jan./1916). Rebecca was the daughter of Edwin Fussell and Margaret Glaze who came to this part of the country from Georgia. Andrew first appeared, at the age of 18, in the 1850 Washington Parish census as a farm laborer in the household of Jeremiah Magee. Where he came from the Lord only knows; but we're still working on it. He and Rebecca married in Washington Parish 3/Dec./1854. They had four children — Chesley Bostic; Louis Andrew; Emily or Emma; and Tiry A., who died at age 19.

Chess and Lula had eight children: Andrew, married Lola Emma Brumfield and had 3 children — Lois Ethel, Ellie Mae, and Robert Brussard (Bob). Maggie, married Fletcher L. Smith and had four children — Benjamin James (B.J.), Lily Mae, Louella (died as a child), and Wilson Fletcher. Rosa, married William Benjamin (Ben) Graves and had 9 children — Avery, Jessie, Willie, Houston (Shootie), Lula, Leo, Harry (Pistol), and two infants who died at birth. Mamie, married John Pilgrim Smith and had seven children — James Michael (Mike), J.P. Maxwell (Jake), Paul Bunyan, Lou Easter, India Elizabeth, Rosa Mae, and Jack Dempsey (Jack). Otis, married Erah Udine Brock and raised five children — Clyde Walter, Alton Chesley, Leroy Otis, Malcolm John, and Harriet Geneva. Mae, married Warren Quitman Ard and raised seven children — Adma Claiborne, Lula Dolees, Mamie Louise, Doris Marie, Lottie Mae, Jimmie Warren, and John Earl. Lemuel, married Althea Brumfield and had two children — Leatrice and Cedric. Albert, married Belva Miller and had 4 children — Lavonia, Lazelle, Bobby Earl, and Betty Rae.

By the Death of Frank James, Last of the Brothers

Started on Career of Crime by Alleged Prosecution

Columbia and Russellville Suffered From Gang

Close of Life Passed in Upright Living

Born in Atmosphere of Strife

Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 18. It is difficult to understand how one man could have taken part in all of these escapades and have died of an old-age malady:

Led part of Quantrell's guerillas throughout Civil War.
Captured Plattsburg, Mo. and won prize of $1,000 for exploit.
Led Quantrell men in killing citizens and burning Lawrence, Kansas.
Sacked and pillaged Independence, Lee's Summit, and Richfield, Mo.
Robbed and killed unarmed soldiers of Centralia, Mo.
With three associates fought and defeated forty Union Soldier.
Shot and killed Alvas Dailey, old enemy.
Shot down three deputies when accused of horse stealing and held crowd at bay while escaping.
Left eight men behind dead after a free-for-all fight in a California gambling house.
Robbed the bank at Gallatin, Mo., shooting down cashier.
Robbed bank at Columbia, Ky., and killed cashier.
Held up secretary of Kansas City Fair Association on grounds and made away with $10,000.
Robbed bank in Corydon, Iowa.
Robbed St. Genevieve, Mo. Savings Association and drove pursurers back to town.
Wrecked and held up train near Council Bluffs, Iowa, killing engineer.
Held up stage coach near Hot Springs, Ark., and relieved passengers of more than $1,000.
Locked many persons in station at Gadshill, Mo., and robbed train of $20,000 to $30,000 after flagging it.
Evaded capture by several small armies of Pinkerton detectives.
Robbed an express train near Sedalia, Mo., of $20,000.
Held town of Northfield, Minn., at bay while robbing bank of all its funds and killing cashier.
Defeated, with one brother, fifteen Mexican cattle thieves, killing them all.
Gave up hopes of life when stricken with tuberculosis in prison.

Died at Country Home

Yet at his quiet country home near Kearney, Clay County, Mo., Frank James, whose bandit exploits shocked the entire nation for twenty years, breathed his last the other day.

Slowly the constitution that once was iron yielded to the weight of years; years that had been filled with thrills such as few persons ever feel.

Frank James, whose bank and train robberies, murders and raids in connection with his brother, Jesse James, and Cole and Thomas Younger, was best known of all desperate characters in the history of the West, lived a quiet and peaceful life for many years. In Clay County and all over Missouri he won respect for honesty and sobriety.

The hero of half a hundred dime novels seldom spoke in late years of his outlaw exploits, but when he had been persuaded to talk, there was that old snapping of jaws and clenching of fists that characterized his days as the terror of all Missouri Sheriffs.

"I don't care to talk about those days," he said recently, when a visitor mentioned a noted bank robbery in which Frank James was a leader. "Jesse has been gone these many years. Cole Younger and myself have done penance in prison and are living respectable lives. Let's let bygones be bygones."

LAST APPEARANCES

During late years Frank James' only public appearances were as starter of horse races at county fairs, where he had been a drawing card. He seldom left his farm the last three years except to go to the annual reunion of Quantrell's guerrilla veterans in a suburb of Kansas City two days each fall.

Frank James owned a fine stock farm near Kearney, Mo., and other farm property in Oklahoma. His last illness was a complication of diseases due principally to age.

Although "dime novels" have filled many youthful minds with ideas about the James boys' exploits, few accurate accounts of their adventures ever have been printed. All of the books have been filled with fictitious adventures with which the James boys had nothing to do. The truth would have been just as interesting.

Frank James was born in 1843. His father died when he was young, and Frank and Jesse James were reared by their mother and Dr. Reuben Samuels, a stepfather.

Even in his boyhood Frank James found himself in the midst of border trouble between the slavery sympathizers of his own Clay County, Missouri, and abolitionists just across the line in Kansas.

When the Civil War started, Frank James was 18, hot-blooded and full of sympathy for the Southern cause. He left home to join the forces of Gen. Sterling Price, who was commanding a regular Confederate force. Young James went with the Price army to Springfield, where he became ill with measles. By the time he had sufficiently recovered to ride a horse, Price's forces were too far away for him to reach them.

Joined Quantrell

But Quantrell, the guerrilla leader was not far away and his ways of fighting were more appealing to Young James than those of Price. Young James joined Quantrell and remained with him until Quantrell was killed in Kentucky near the close of the war.

Jesse James joined Quantrell in the spring of 1863. Mrs. Samuels, mother of the James boys, told the story of Jesse's joining:

"One day a gang of 'home guards' came to our house and tried to force Dr. Samuels to tell where Quantrell was operating--they thought he would know because Frank was with Quantrell. Dr. Samuels and Jesse were plowing.

"The militiamen took Dr. Samuels from his plow and threw a rope around his neck. They dragged him to a tree and demanded to know where Quantrell was.

"He did not know, but the men would not believe him and strung him up four or five times. He was almost dead when they dragged him to the house.

"The captain of the militiamen said they were going to take him out and shoot him. I was too frightened to move. They rode over the hill and soon I heard several shots.

"I did not know for several days that they had not carried out the threat, but had locked him up in the Liverty jail.

"After they were gone Jesse showed me where they had used rawhides on his back, but all he said was, 'Ma, I'm going to join Quantrell.' He was only sixteen years old then."

Dr. Samuels died in an asylum in 1908. He never fully recovered his mental faculties after the harrowing experience of 1863.

Became Leaders

Only boys, Frank and Jesse James soon became leaders of the Quantrell gang through their boldness and good marksmanship.

Frank James distinguished himself in the capture of Pittsburg, Mo. The Quantrell gang was enriched by many thousands of dollars by the capture, and Frank James was given $1,000 for obtaining information which made the capture possible.

Next in the series of the James boys' exploits was the sacking of Lawrence, Kansas. After days of forced marching, Quantrell and his raiders attacked the town the morning of August 21, 1863.

Throughout the war the James boys continued to lead the reckless raiders. They knew that death faced them every minute. An ambush might be immediately ahead or Kansas "Redlegs" might be creeping up behind them. This life hardened them beyond their years and made them keen of eye and strong of body. They learned to sleep lightly, always on the watch.

It was a fit training school for men who later were to lead gang after gang in outlaw expeditions.

Doubtless they were credited with many wartime murders which they did not commit, but many were their victims.

Independence, Lee's Summit and Richfield, Mo., were plundered and pillaged by the gang. At Richfield a small garrison of Union soldiers was shot down.

Boldest Adventure

It was during the latter part of the war that the gang executed its boldest adventure. Under the leadership of "Bill" Anderson, the Quantrell men assembled at Centralia, Mo., where they had learned a trainload of Union soldiers was to pass. The soldiers were on their way back to homes in Iowa and Illinois. They had just been paid off and carried large amounts of money with them.

The Quantrell gang boarded the train and robbed the unarmed soldiers. Those who resisted were shot down without compunction.

Vengeance, however, was swift. An Iowa regiment, encamped nearby, captured Anderson and many of his men before they could get away. All those captured were shot. Frank and Jesse James escaped.

The last stand of the Quantrell guerrillas was near the little village of Smiley, Ky., near Taylorsville. They were cornered there by a superior force and nearly annihilated. Their leader being killed. Frank James, at the time, was visiting at home and thus again escaped.

Mother Tells of Conflict

Mrs. Samuels, mother of the James boys, in speaking of their bravery, related the following:

"I remember one day during the war, the boys and two other men rode up to the house to wash. They told me Federals were chasing them. My Negro boy held their horses at a back gate while I watched at the front.

"Soon I saw about forty Federal soldiers coming up through the field. 'I see some Federals,' I shouted to the boys.

" 'How many, mother?' asked Frank. 'About forty,' I answered. 'Well, keep your eye on them, Mother,' said Jesse, and they went right on washing.

" 'Boys, they are coming to the house,' I shouted a moment later. Jesse was spluttering with his face down in the wash basin and he only stopped long enough to say, 'Let 'em come, Mother, there are four of us and I guess we can whip that many Federals all right enough.'

"I was scared and I ran back to the boys and begged them to run. Frank only laughed and said, 'Don't get rattled, Mother. We're not going away from here with dirty necks if we have to fight 240 Federals instead of forty.'

"The boys did not mount their horses until the Federals were at the gate. Then they sprang into their saddles and galloped away like mad. The Federals shouted and there was much shooting and cursing. Our boys shot back as they turned in their saddles. Soon they disappeared over a hill.

"I waited a half hour and couldn't stand it any longer. I got on Bess, my horse, and followed. About a mile from the house someone hailed me. 'Where are you going, Mother?' he asked. The boys were leading their horses and the Federals were nowhere to be seen."

Remained in Kentucky

After the war Frank James remained in Kentucky some time to escape threatened vengeance for some of his Missouri ventures. Suddenly he appeared near home and made this statement: "I'm going down to see Alvas Daily."

Daily was found next day with two bullet holes through his head. He had incurred the enmity of the James boys during the war.

Daily had been killed with his hand on his own half-drawn revolver. The murder was not fixed up on Frank James until he confessed years later.

About the time Frank James was passing through Brandenburg, several horses were stolen there. A posse was organized and a trail led them to Frank James. Four deputies approached him while he was sitting on the veranda of a hotel. They told him he was under arrest.

"Oh, I couldn't think of it," replied James as he drew his revolver. Several shots rang out. Witnesses afterward declared five persons were killed. Two of the deputies lay writhing on the ground. A third was dying in the dust. The fourth, after firing a shot through the bandit's hip, fled in terror.

Frank James stood leaning against a table, his pistol extended, smoking, in front of him. A crowd surrounded him, crying for vengeance. Frank James, with a bullet in his hip, laughed.

"Stand back there," he said. "I'll shoot the first man that draws."

The crowd stood awed.

"Look, what's coming--jump!" shouted Frank James.

Bandits Disappeared

All turned to see what was menacing them. There was nothing, and they turned back. The wounded bandit was not there. How he disappeared and where he went, he never has revealed to this day. Months passed before his wound healed. It was several years before he entirely recovered.

When the James boys returned to Clay County, Mo., a few years after the war, they were idols of the Southern sympathizers. The county residents had gained the idea that ill treatment by Union troops had driven the James boys into the Quantrell gang. This sympathy for them afterward aided them many times in escaping capture for train and bank robberies.

From this time it is said Frank James did not appear in public for years except in disguise.

Jesse James was at his home near Kearney, in 1867, recuperating from wounds he had received in an exploit when five men came to arrest him. Realizing that capture probably meant death, he fired at them through a door. Two men were killed, two mortally wounded, and the fifth escaped by fleeing.

Young James took the wounded men into his home and gave them every care until other men came to attempt the capture. Then he fled. He escaped to Kentucky, where he was joined by Frank.

Appeared at Russellville

In March, the next year, a gang of armed men rode into the town of Russellville, Ky., and ordered the residents to remain in their homes and punctuated the order by brandishing pistols.

A bank was raided and the bandits rode away. Pursuers followed them through Tennessee, but they escaped into Missouri.

Frank and Jesse were next heard of in California, where they were living "in funds." This year restored their almost shattered health. Soon, however, they were in trouble again. A quarrel in a gambling den ended in Jesse shooting a contender who had drawn a knife.

The Sheriff was playing at the same table. He pointed a revolver at the bandit's breast and ordered him to surrender.

With catlike agility Jesse James slipped from in front of the weapon, and in an instant the Sheriff fell dead with a bullet through his heart.

There was a free-for-all fight. Lamps were overturned and friends fired on friends in confusion. Frank and Jesse James escaped during the confusion, leaving behind six dead and eight seriously wounded men. They fled to the mountains, spending much time with the Indians before making their way back to Missouri.

Reorganized Old Gang

They organized their old gang and soon the bank in Gallatin, Mo., was robbed. John W. Sheets, cashier, was shot down in cold blood. None of the bank's money was ever recovered.

Columbia, a quiet little village in Adair County, Kentucky, was the scene of the next violent action. The gang entered the village in two sections from opposite sides, meeting at the Deposit Bank. R. A. C. Martin, the cashier, was killed when he refused to tell the combination to the bank safe. Henry Garnett, a citizen, was wounded for attempting to resist.

All the bank's gold was scooped up and the gang escaped. This was in April, 1872. They were pursued into Tennessee, where Herbert Saunders, a member, was caught and killed. Both the James boys and the younger brothers, afterwards noted as leaders of gangs of their own, were implicated in this escapade.

That fall a daring robbery of the fair grounds of Kansas City, Mo., was carried out. The fair secretary was forced by a masked horseman to give up $10,000 he was about to take to a bank. Jesse James denied by letter that he took part in this.

The bank at Corydon, Iowa, was robbed in June, 1873. The banker, knowing the fate of other cashiers who had refused, consented to open the bank safe. All the bank's funds were taken. Jesse James, posing as a country boy, joined the posse and helped "chase himself."

Frank and Jesse James next led their band in the holdup of the St. Genevieve, Mo., Savings Association. Several thousand dollars were taken. None of the money was ever recovered. A posse was compelled by the James boys to turn and ride back to town.

Turn to Train Robbery

July 20, 1873, was the date of the James boys' turn from bank to train robbery.

They tore up rails fourteen miles west of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and lay in wait for a fast express. The train was late, and the engineer, trying to make up lost time, was driving too fast to stop when he saw the torn up track. He was killed and the fireman badly injured when the engine plunged down an embankment.

Frank and Jesse James, Cole and Bob Younger, and another called "Comanche Tony" ordered the passengers from the cars and relieved them of their valuables. The mail and express cars were also stripped. Posses sought in vain in several states for the band.

On a raw January morning the band held up the stage coach running from Malvern to Hot Springs, Ark. Two ambulances filled with invalids on the way to the springs also were held up. The highway men leaped out from behind bushes at the roadside and covered the guards before they could draw their weapons.

The passengers were lined up along the side of the road and relieved of $1,000 as well as much jewelry. It is said that Jesse James took from former Governor Burbank of North Dakota a fine watch which he had been given by the State. This watch is said to have been kept by the bandit until his death, when it was returned to the former Governor by the James family.

Aroused by Robbery

The entire country next was aroused by a train robbery at Gadshill, Mo., the night of January 31, 1874. Seven bandits appeared at the station and locked all waiting persons in waiting rooms. They then set the stop signal for the night express which was known to carry valuable mail and express.

The train had hardly stopped when the crew was covered. Between $20,000 and $30,000 was taken. There was an exciting chase but no captures.

The railroads and express companies employed Pinkerton detectives to run down the band. Three operatives--Edward Lill, Frank Daniels, and J. H. Whicher--were killed when they pushed the bandits too hard.

Whicher trusted information to a Liberty, Mo., man that he was going to the James home in disguise to capture the bandits. Warning reached them before Whicher, and when he arrived he was killed in cold blood.

Infuriated, the Pinkerton company organized a large force in Liberty and these men rode to the Samuels home where the James boys were staying. The same old under-ground system sent a warning ahead and the James boys escaped.

Approaching the house, the detectives saw several persons sitting in a front room, and believing the James boys were there, hurled a bomb through a window.

Mrs. Samuels Injured

Mrs. Samuels thought it merely tar and rags and tossed it into the fire. It exploded and killed her 8-year-old son, Archie, and blew off her right arm and mangled her side.

A Liberty lawyer led the detectives in this attempted capture. He heard that he was to pay for this with his life and removed to Northfield, Minn. This fact led to the famous Northfield raid later.

In an interval of peace, both the James boys married. Jesse wedded his cousin, Miss Lee Mimms, who had nursed him back to life after he was wounded in one of his most daring exploits. She remained his faithful wife until his death.

Frank James, after an ardent courtship, married Miss Annie Ralston, a belle of Independence, Mo. She was a society favorite and loved gayety, but after her marriage she was ostracized by those among whom she had been a favorite.

There was a decrease in train robberies during the early married life of the brothers. But soon the country was startled by the holdup of a night express train in Rocky Cut, near Sedalia, Mo. The loot was $20,000. Hobbs Kerry, a new member of the James band, was captured. He said that he had worked under leadership of the James and Younger boys.

Soon Frank and Jesse James sought revenge. They led their men to Northfield, Minn., eight strong, and held up a bank there on September 7, 1876. Six of the band held the crowd at bay while Frank and Jesse held up the cashier, J. D. Haywood. He refused to tell the safe combination and he was shot down by Jesse James.

Cornered in Swamp

In the meantime, citizens were arming themselves. The robbers, with several thousand dollars of the bank's money, were cornered in a swamp. One was killed and several were captured. Robert, James, and Cole Younger were given life sentences in the Minnesota penitentiary. Jesse and Frank James escaped and hid in Kansas City and later in Texas. Their escape was considered nothing short of miraculous.

They became ranchmen in Texas and had the unusual experience of being robbed themselves by a raiding gang of Mexicans, who drove away many cattle. The James boys followed and there was a pitched battle. The two men killed fifteen Mexicans and drove back their cattle. Shortly afterward, they held up a Mexican silver train, escaping with thousands of dollars.

Next they were heard of at Glendale, Mo., on October 7, 1879. A few citizens there were locked in a railroad station, the night signal was set, a night express stopped and robbed of $50,000. They escaped only after several pursuers had been killed.

Band Comes to Kentucky

The band then removed to Kentucky. Frank James, however, did not go. In Kentucky a quarrel between Dick Liddle and Jim Cummings, gang members, over the love of Miss Mattie Collins sowed the seed that later led to the death of Jesse James.

Liddle won the girl. Wood Hite, a cousin of the losing suitor, followed them to Missouri and appeared one morning at the cottage of Robert and Charles Ford and opened fire on Liddle. Robert Ford shot Hite before he succeeded in hurting Liddle. Hite was taken into a room where, it later was brought out, he died of suffocation from rags with which he was gagged to prevent his groans being heard by neighbors.

Jesse James, in hiding in St. Joseph, was told Hite, his cousin, had been killed by Liddle. Robert Ford knew James would kill him if James learned it was he (Ford) who shot Hite, and he made up his mind to "get there first."

In his trial later Ford told how he shot Jesse James in the back. Robert Ford later was killed in a Denver saloon brawl.

This broke up the James band. Frank James, in hiding, began negotiations for his surrender and gave himself up in October, 1882. He was sentenced to prison for life.

After several years of confinement, consumption was believed to have him marked for death and he was pardoned. Soon after this he apparently regained his health and never again was menaced by consumption.

SURRENDER OF FRANK JAMES

AS GRAPHICALLY DESCRIBED BY GOVERNOR CRITTENDEN

Franklin Favorite
March 21, 1901

Alfred Henry Lewis, writing to the New York Herald, tells of Frank James' surrender to Gov. Crittenden. He tells the story as Gov. Crittenden told it to him.

In November, 1882, Frank James came into Jefferson City and gave up his guns to the Governor. I have heard the story from Gov. Crittenden's lips.

"It was about five of the afternoon," said Gov. Crittenden, "when Major John N. Edwards, then editor of the Kansas City Times, who had been with Frank James at the back of Quantrell in the old guerrilla days, came into my office at the capitol. There was a mild man of middle size, clothed among other garments, in a derby hat and a diagonal overcoat who walked close to the Major's elbow.

"Governor," said Major Edwards, "I want to introduce you to Frank James, of whom you have heard, and who has some business to transact with you of a moment to both."

"Then," continued Gov. Crittenden, "the mild man stood forward. As he did he ran his hands under his overcoat and brought into sight a belt heavy with cartridges and two 45 caliber, eight-inch six-shooters, one a Colt's and one a Smith & Wesson. I have these pistols yet.

"Governor," said the mild man, taking a step toward me, "Major Edwards has told you who I am. I'm Frank James. I want to surrender to you, and here are my guns in proof of what I say. For sixteen years I've been hunted like a wolf, and I'm tired out. I've got a boy of twelve, who does not know his last name. I've got a wife and I want to settle down with her and live like other folks. For that reason I've come in to give myself up. I want nothing but justice and a fair trial. I've no doubt of my acquittal, and the step I now take seems the shortest way to a day when, under my own name and fearing no man, I can live with my wife and boy in my own home."

Crittenden gave James in charge to his private secretary, a man named Farr. This was about six o'clock in the evening.

They planned to take the midnight train for Independence, where indictment had long been waiting against Frank James for the Blue Cut robbery.

Pending the coming of the midnight train James and Farr went across to the hotel to get dinner and kill time. The news of the James "surrender" had spread; there were a thousand folks to crowd about them. This, after the first ten minutes, made James uneasy. He whispered to Farr, "Have you got any guns on you?"

"No," replied Farr.

"Well, for heaven's sake get some," said James. "I'm used to carrying guns. I'm nervous without them. There may be a dozen lunatics in this crowd, any one of whom might put a bullet through my head to merely say hereafter that he'd downed Frank James."

Farr was ignorant of "guns." He obtained a brace, however, and James loaded them with great comfort to himself. He offered them to Farr. The latter told him to keep them, as he was untaught in their use. James belted them under his coat, and with an air of deep relief said he was now ready to dine. The two sat down to the table, the prisoner in possession of the artillery.

It was morning when the party reached Independence. The wife and mother and Col. Ralston, the father-in-law of the bandit, were waiting at the station with "Con" Murphey, the marshal, when Farr and his captive stepped from the train. When they got to the courthouse, the James party went into one of the empty jury rooms to have a talk. Farr and the marshal were in the latter's office across the hall. The news had not yet reached Independence, and there was no crowd.

"What will be the amount of the bail?" asked Farr of "Con" Murphey, the marshal. The latter looked surprised.

"He can't give bail," replied Murphey. "James is charged with the murder of Billie Westfall, the conductor, who was killed (he was slain by Jesse) at the time of the holdup."

Farr was bothered.

"James doesn't understand it that way," said Farr. "He supposed the charge was robbery and that he could give bail."

Murphey sprang up and reached for a Winchester rifle.

"All I have to say," observed Murphey, as with a click! click! he pumped a cartridge into the chamber, "is that Frank James is here, and he's going to stay. If he gets out now, he'll have to get me first." With that the marshal was starting to take possession of the outlaw. Farr detained him.

"Hold on," he said. "James has two big guns on him."

"I don't care if he has a score," said the marshal, "he's going to stay with me."

Farr went in and explained to James that the charge was murder and no bail was possible. The bandit's eyes glinted with the fierce surprise of it. With the word he was on his feet and his trained hands went to his guns like a flash.

"What's that?" he exclaimed.

"Shoot your way out, Frank; shoot your way out!" hissed his mother, on the instant as feverishly on fire as her son. "They can't take you, Frank. There ain't men enough in Jackson County to take my boy."

One would have supposed that this would have opened the ball with a crash. It didn't. Frank James lapsed into his natural coolness in a moment. He even turned on his mother in half wrath.

"Keep still, mother," he said. "I've taken altogether too much of your advice in my time. Here's a woman whose interest is greater than yours. Let's hear from her. "What would you do?" continued James, turning to his wife. "I'll do what you say. But don't be afraid to say, 'Shoot!' This marshal couldn't stop me. I can get away if you give the word."

"No, Frank," said his wife, "you've given your word to the Governor. Keep it. I'll visit you every day in jail, and it won't be long when you're free for good."

"Call in Murphey, Farr," said James.

Murphey, with rifle at a ready, was just at the door framed up for war. He came in and James gave him the two guns which Farr had loaned him. Also, he turned over two derringers with which he'd been armed from the first. Ten minutes later the jail doors closed on the last of the James gang.

MOTHER OF THE JAMES BOYS

DIES ON TRAIN IN OKLAHOMA

(Kansas City Star)
Oklahoma City, Oklahoma
February 10, 1911

Mrs. Zerelda Samuels, mother of Jesse and Frank James, the ex-bandits of Missouri, died in the Pullman car of a St. Louis to San Francisco passenger train twenty miles out from Oklahoma City at three o'clock this afternoon. Mrs. Samuels had spent two months visiting her son, Frank James, who lives on a farm near Fletcher, Oklahoma. She and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Frank James, were on their way to Kansas City to visit Mrs. Samuel's grandson, Jesse James, Jr., and from there they intended going to Excelsior Springs, where John Samuels, a son by her second marriage, lives.

Mrs. Samuels was 86 years old. She had been in ill health a long time and death was due to natural causes. The body was taken to Kansas City tonight, where the burial will be.

One afternoon sixty-three years ago, a Baptist minister of the pioneer ranks stood waist deep in the waters of a little stream in Clay County, Missouri, and immersed half a hundred men and women. Among those who stood on the bank was a tall, broad-shouldered woman, with keen eyes. In her arms she held her baby boy, 14 months old, who laughed and clapped his hands as his father performed the rite.

The father was the type of pioneer who was as much at home with the shotgun as the scriptures. He had come overland from Kentucky seven years before and was then known as an exhorter and revivalist of great power. Three years later he left his wife standing at the gate of their Clay County farm and went West in search of gold. There he died of fever.

That baby boy was Jesse James. He led his mother through such a life as perhaps no other has ever known. And through it all she followed with Spartan-like affection. Once when the band of Pinkerton detectives surrounded the house to catch her sons they threw a hand-grenade through a window. The exploding bomb destroyed her right arm and killed her nine-year-old son, Archie.

Dr. Reuben Samuels, who married Mrs. James in the Civil War days, died in 1908 in an asylum for the insane at St. Joseph. John Samuels, his son in Excelsior Springs, said he had been mentally unbalanced since 1862, when federal soldiers hanged him until nearly dead in an effort to make him tell the whereabouts of Frank James.

Mrs. Samuels loved to talk of her eventful life, and as she swung the empty sleeve a glance of defiance would come into her eyes, still keen, with something of a haunted expression.

About nine miles from Excelsior Springs on the road to Kearney a wooden sign, gaudy and yellow and scrawling, has proclaimed for years:

This Way to the James Farm
Admission 25 Cents

The road through a pasture leads to a low, rambling house. At the door, a white-haired woman, stern face and wrinkled, would face the visitors and say, "You curiosity seekers come right in this way." Mrs. Samuels, mother of the James boys, 86 years old and with nothing but a life of hardship to look back upon, was selling what remained of her son's notoriety as a means of livelihood.

The pictures, of course, she would show first, ending with the photograph of Frank James on his farm in Oklahoma. After the pictures of the "boys,"-- there was no mention of their misdeeds except in a tone of derision for anyone daring to accuse them of worse than guerrilla warfare--a part of the hand grenade is shown, used as a door fastener.

"That's what the Pinkertons threw," she would say. "And that's what tore my arm off and killed little Archie. It was late at night, when we heard a crash. We ran to the back and when we got into the kitchen my husband saw a hand grenade smoking in the middle of the floor. He kicked it into the fireplace and then it exploded. But they didn't get the boys."

A photograph of the gravestone of Jesse James hung across the room. Under it is this inscription: In Loving Remembrance of My Beloved Son, Jesse W. James, Died April 3, 1882. Murdered by a traitor and a coward, whose name is not worthy to appear here.

The spirit of the woman is in the last two lines. "My boys were brave. I saw enough of it," she would say, laughing sharply. "I remember one day during the war Jesse and three more of Quantrell's men rode up to the house to wash. They told me Federals were chasing them, and my Negro boy held the horses in the back while I watched from the front. By and by, I saw about forty Federal soldiers going up through the field over toward old Dan Askew's house. Dan was a Northern spy. I shouted to Jesse:

" 'I see some Federals.'

" 'How many, mother?' asked Jesse.

" 'About forty.'

" 'Well, keep your eye on them, mother,' said Jesse, and they went right on washing.

"In a minute I saw them coming down toward our house and I shouted: 'Boys, they're coming to the house.

"Jesse was spluttering with his face down in the water basin, and he stopped long enough to say: 'Let 'em come, mother; there are four of us, and I guess we can whip forty Federals all right enough.'

"I got scared and I ran back to where the boys were washing and I begged them to run.

"Jesse just laughed at me and said: 'Don't get rattled, mother. I'm not going away from here with a dirty neck if I have to fight two hundred and forty Federals instead of forty.'

"Well, sir, those four boys did not mount their horses till the soldiers were at the front gate and they heard the latch rattling. Then they sprang into their saddles and leaped the back fence and rode across the pasture like mad. The Federals galloped around the house, part one way and part the other, and pulled their cavalry pistols, and such shooting and cursing you never heard.

"Our boys shot back as they ran, and the last I saw of them was a waving line of horses going over the top of the hill. I waited half an hour and then I could stand it no longer. I got on my horse, Betsy, and went up over the hill, expecting to find the bodies of four boys shot full of holes. About a mile from the house some one hailed me from the brush.

" 'Where are you goin, ma?'

"It was Jesse, and he and the boys were coming down from the old school-house, leading their horses and looking for their caps, which they had lost.

"Some of the detectives that came prowling around had narrow escapes," continued Mrs. Samuels. "They used to always come when they thought my boys were away, but two of them missed it once and came very near getting killed. Jesse was at my home one day when I saw two men coming down the road. They stopped at the gate and hallooed. Jesse stepped just inside the door to the stairway leading to the attic and stood there with his revolvers in his hands. Jesse said: " 'Go to the door, mother.'

"I opened the door and one of the men said they were cattle buyers, and asked me if we had any fat cattle.

" 'The cattle you are looking for are in the house; come in and get them!' I shouted. They talked together awhile and then went on."

BLIND WOMAN KEEPS SECRET

Bandit's Wife Lives on Missouri Farm

Never Heard to Mention The Career of Her Notorious Husband and His Brother

Franklin Favorite
July 13, 1939

Kearney, Mo.--A gentle little blind woman is living out her years, now 86, on a 117-year-old log cabin farm near Kearney--with the true, bloodpulsing story of Frank and Jesse James locked tightly in her heart.

Fortunes have been offered her for the story. Unhesitatingly, she has turned them down. She vows the story will go with her to the grave.

The story which she alone could tell is of her breath-taking romance and married life with Frank James, one of the two most talked about outlaws who ever drew a gun from the hip or galloped at break neck speed on horseback across the dusty prairie. The other was his brother, Jesse James.

So quietly has this courageous little woman remained in self-imposed seclusion that many persons did not even know she was alive until the news leaked out recently that she had recovered from an illness of bronchial pneumonia.

Has Tremendous Story

What a story she could tell.....her big, colonial plantation home near Independence, Mo.....crash of a war shell through her bedroom..... appearance at the plantation of Quantrell's raiders, among their number the James boys.....war's end and the very name of James spreading terror in a period of outlawry.....1875.....elopement of pretty vivacious Annie Ralston with Frank James.....an enraged slave-owning father, stunned by his daughter's escapade... ..flight with Frank.....days in a covered wagon.....birth of their boys.... ..life fraught with the fear of capture.....in Kentucky....in Baltimore....in New York.....1882.....Jesse assassinated.....Frank in surrender.....Long anxious weeks of murder trials with the State demanding his life.....ultimate acquittal.. ..Frank as a stage actor.....As a St. Louis theatre doorman....and at long last, retirement to the old farm.....the hectic days behind.....the quiet life of simple farm folk.....1915.....death of Frank James.....ahead for her only a long, long road.....and her memories!

These only are lightly brushed touches to the story. Only she could fill in the full exciting picture.

But she took her cue from Frank James.

"The only direct references I ever heard him make to the stories about Jesse and himself," avers Frank's son, Robert, now 61, who lives on the old farm with his mother, "was when he said: 'I told all about that at the trials and they must have believed me, for they acquitted me, and that was all the telling

I care to make.' "

"My mother," Robert relates, "never has said anything about them (the James boys) except to ridicule some of the wild stories she has read at times, such as about Jesse once being a singing teacher when he couldn't sing a note."

The farm where she lives today is teeming with James history. There the minister-father of the James boys, the Rev. Robert James, brought his bride in 1845.

On that farm Jesse James was born.

Through a window of that farm in January, 1875, detectives seeking the James brothers tossed the bomb which killed an eight-year-old half-brother, Archie, and tore an arm off the mother of the outlaws.

For 20 years after Jesse James was slain, his grave was there. Then the present burial site at Kearney was selected.

On that farm in 1915, Frank James died of a heart attack in the arms of his faithful wife who sobbed.

"No better husband ever lived."

To that farm now come the curious.
